What You Want to Know When You Want to Know It Explanation of Marginal Index

The ingenuity of the device deserves special explanation, for it is a patent system of instantaneous reference. The indices of each map appear upon each map's border. The information lies in a nutshell. These wonderful plates, compiled by experts and absolutely up to date, are a miniature counterpart of the world's physical appearance as it exists at this moment. The maps are not merely pictorial gazettes; they are also geographical and gazettes combined. The ruled border on the four sides of every map is divided into equal-distant spaces, designated upon the sides by letters, at the top and bottom by numerals. If lines were projected from these marginal points small squares would be formed by their intersection. On the margin of each page appears a classified list of all the principal divisions, cities, and towns inscribed upon that special map, where they are classified alphabetically and according to their commercial importance and prominence as centers of population.
